Designer's Secrets: How to Save on Home Furnishings

WASHINGTONIAN

THE INSPIRING STORY

A RESCUE IN BETHESDA

At the scene, they saw smoke coming from the house and Michael running toward them. "My children are inside!" he said, pointing frantically to their second-floor bedroom window as Oglesby jumped off the truck. "Get them!" Oglesby threw the 30-pound air tank for his breathing apparatus over his shoulders and went toward the house. "Three babies trapped," he said into his radio. "I'm making entries on the hose line." A mantra among firefighters is "Risk little to save little; risk a lot to save a lot." Every firefighter who has been trained knows that firefighters are trained never to enter a burning building without a hose line to protect them except in extreme circumstances. If Oglesby had two daughters, he would have rushed into the house without waiting the minute it took to unravel and connect the hose with which he had to be serious. Driving south on I-270, Montgomery County Fire Training Center, battalion chief Jim Resnick was approached by a caller who said when he saw a fire crackling in the house, Resnick had known Oglesby for a dozen years. "I was cool under pressure," he said. "I never heard his voice." Battalion Chief Resnick dispatched a fire truck to Montgomery County Fire Training Center. Resnick's phone rang. "Score! Dumpster fire!"
